9 TIPS FOR DESIGNING YOUR NEW DENTAL OFFICE

BY INGA PAUL
SENIOR INTERIOR DESIGNER

Planning and designing a new dental office is incredibly exciting for a private practice. It is something only experienced once or twice in a career. You want to make sure everything goes right, and the best way is to lean on professionals who have done it before.

At Goetze Dental, we work on hundreds of dental office design projects every year, ranging from single operatory redesigns to full build-outs of new offices.

1 DETERMINE YOUR NON-NEGOTIABLES

Don't be afraid to lay out your non-negotiables at the beginning of the project. This is your dream office—what are must-haves in your new space?

Some non-negotiables are strictly functional, like a left-handed operatory setup. Others are completely subjective. We once worked with a doctor who asked for a shower in his office. He planned to ride his bike to work and wanted to clean up before seeing patients.

Whatever your non-negotiables, lay them out at the beginning so your designer can incorporate them into the plan.

2 CONSIDER FUNCTION AS WELL AS FORM

Aesthetics is the first thing that comes to mind when someone says 'design.' However, function and ergonomics are just as important, especially in a space where you'll spend the better part of each day. You want to build an office that fits you in every way.

Nowhere is ergonomics more important than in the operatory. Consider your height, handedness, and your favorite working position. Everyone's functional needs are different.

3 LOOK AT THE COST-BENEFIT OF NEW EQUIPMENT

There has been an explosion of innovation in dental equipment over the last decade. The shift has been so powerful that it has changed the way doctors treat patients. Equipment is a crucial piece to consider during your dental office design project, and often, the benefits of buying new are well worth the cost.

New dental equipment makes you and your team more effective, productive and can expand your range of services. It's hard to put a value on improving your treatment practices, but many doctors quickly see the ROI with happier patients and more referrals. Plus, it feels great to have shiny new equipment in your beautiful new space.

4 DO YOUR RESEARCH ON NEW EQUIPMENT

You have an abundance of choices when it comes to equipment. Here's our recommended process for a comprehensive evaluation.

1. ONLINE. Start by thinking about the specific equipment you plan to incorporate in your new facility.

The Goetze Dental website, www.goetzedental.com has a robust resource library and includes brochures and specs from the manufacturers.

2. VISIT A SHOWROOM. Would you purchase a car without test driving it first? Take the time to familiarize yourself, in person, with the equipment and models available through various manufacturers. This will give you the chance to get a feel for how things might function in your operatory cockpit, and perhaps provide some new ideas you hadn't considered. Also take this opportunity to narrow your selection down to those brands that best meet your needs, and begin thinking about your budget. We always love visitors at the Goetze Dental showroom at our headquarters in Kansas City, or any of our branch locations in mid-America.

3. TRAVEL TO THE MANUFACTURER. Once you've narrowed your search down by manufacturer, many will encourage you to visit their facilities and showroom for a behind-the-scenes look at how your equipment is made, the durability testing it goes through, as well as explore the myriad of configurations to further customize plans to match your working style and needs. Some companies offer continuing education programs around ergonomics and office planning to add another layer of insight to your project.

LIMIT OFFICE DOWNTIME WITH PHASED CONSTRUCTION

Office downtime is a significant concern for dentists as they consider an office design project, and rightfully so. When your office is closed, it is bad for both you and your patients. For some practices, shutting down is virtually impossible.

Fortunately, with a little planning, most office design projects can be conducted in phases, allowing parts of the office to stay open and functional while other parts are being built out. Your design team can help you stage construction in phases to avoid a total shutdown.

VISIT OTHER DENTAL OFFICES

Sometimes, inspiration is found right around the corner. Don't be afraid to walk into other dental offices in your area, especially new or redesigned buildings. If you need an introduction, Goetze Dental has many happy customers whom we helped build their dream offices. They are always thrilled to show off their space and share their experience of the process.

INCLUDE YOUR TEAM IN THE DESIGN PROCESS

Your team has a unique and important perspective on your office design. They are the ones, in large part, handling daily operations, serving patients in the hygiene department, processing instruments through sterilization, managing supply inventory, and setting up the operatories for procedures. Their feedback is critical to designing an office that is easy to navigate.

Well-designed office spaces make employees happier and more productive. They are also more likely to stay in their jobs. Incorporating them into the design process will not only help you design a better office— it also demonstrates that you value them as part of the team.

BUILD MORE SPACE THAN YOU NEED

One key principle of dental office design is to think about your vision and business goals. For many practices, this means growth.

One of the most common things we hear from doctors after a design project is, "I wish I would have built a larger space." That's because most practices see a spike in patients after a redesign. It's best to plan for growth from the beginning than wait until you absolutely need it.

The best time to add extra space is during the initial construction because it is much harder to add plumbing and utilities afterward. Hickerson Dental, for example, built out two operatories but planned for three more in their new office. When they need to grow, adding the new operatories will be fast and simple.

WORK WITH DENTAL OFFICE DESIGN PROFESSIONALS

There is a lot more that goes into a design project than you might think. From plumbing to cabinetry, it is difficult for a working doctor to keep track of every detail. That's why we recommend working with a dental office design professional. They will help you turn your ideas into reality while making sure the basics are covered.

As a value-added resource, our Design Team provides complimentary services when you choose Goetze Dental for your equipment solutions. It is our goal to ensure your project is successful.

GETTING STARTED

After finishing their new office, we hear many doctors say, "I wish I had done this sooner!" Designing a new office may seem daunting, but it is far more feasible, enjoyable, and affordable than you might think. Following these tips will ensure your project goes smoothly from day one.

Like any major construction project, designing a new dental practice takes time to get off the ground. Try to begin the process 12 to 24 months in advance of when you want your new office open. This will give you time to assemble your team, search for locations, and start the preliminary planning steps.

If you're ready to begin your dental office design project, look no further than the Goetze Dental design team. We have decades of experience working with dental practices. We'll help you design the office of your dreams and take your practice to the next level.

HERE ARE TWO TOOLS TO GET YOU STARTED

1. Visit GoetzeDental.com/guide and download the complete Dental Office Design Guide

Your restorations.
Your composite.
Your day.

Universally simpler.

Efficiency is key to navigating a tight schedule, which is why dentists use a single shade for about 80% of their restorations.¹ That's why we created 3M™ Filtek™ Universal Restorative with NaturalMatch technology — so you can improve efficiency without sacrificing esthetics. Just 8 designer shades, a universal opacity and a whiter Extra White let you meet most patient needs.

It's universally simpler.

EDDSON™
 Simplify the way you work.

“ EDDSON’s tools have been instrumental in helping our office maximize production and collection while at the same time helping to reduce our accounts receivable and outstanding claims numbers.

EDDSON’s advanced accounting capabilities and reports as well as the intuitive dashboard have not only increased awareness but have helped our team better understand the ins and outs of running a dental practice.”

Jessica, Office Manager, Kansas City, MO

“ Things we appreciate most include the ease of scheduling, treatment posting and planning, as well as finding patient information at a glance. My personal favorite is EDDSON’s multi-tasking capabilities –particularly when working on time consuming tasks like bulk insurance checks. The ability to open or toggle to another task and not lose where you were is a huge time saver.

We were worried about the conversion to new software but our implementation specialist and the EDDSON support team did a great job of helping our staff through the transition. Without hesitation - we would recommend EDDSON to any office and especially anyone looking to improve the efficiency of their practice.”

Grace, Office Administrator, Humboldt, IA

“ We have been with EDDSON since the early days and can say first-hand, they are always looking for ways to help dental offices improve their efficiency, patient outreach, practice analytics, and so much more. We appreciate having the help-desk on standby for any questions and feature feedback! As a small family business, we love knowing who we are working with and they truly help to ensure our practice's success!”

Kim, Practice Administrator, Jefferson City, MO

“ EDDSON is the most user-friendly software we've ever used. It's easy to navigate and offers many advanced feature for scheduling, accounting, and reporting that are needed for a large practice like ours.”

S. Huckabee, DDS, Kansas City, MO

“ I have had EDDSON Practice Management Software for 4 years. I love how user-friendly the software is. The training and tech support are amazing. Clinically, EDDSON has everything I need and more.”

N. Medley, DDS, Independence, MO
